

I am EXTREMELY concerned, as a practicing geophysicist, that use of Ground-penetrating radar (GPR) will be virtually shut down in the United States by this proposed ruling (98-153), despite the lack of any evidence that GPR units directed into the ground have ever interfered with any communications system.

PLEASE reconsider the restrictions on GPR work. I have and use one of these units and don't want the manufacturers to go out of business, which appears to be a practical consequence of this ruling.
